THE DEFEAT OF BUTLER.

One good result was accomplished by the election on Tuesday-Ben Butler, of Massachusetts, was consigned to the "tomb of which she had created and made a favorite. When Buller was ruling New Orleans with a rod of iron, and covering the American name with ineffable diagrace, Massachusetts frought it was all right and applauded him to the echo. But when Buller aspires to the gubernatorial chair in opposition to his party, he is denounced in Massachusetts for his treatment of southern women and for his villantes communited while commanding during the ciril war. The people of Massachusetts smiled leverency upon Butler's crimes and made him a favorite until they spoiled him, and, pending the late canvass, the politicinas of the Old Bay State endeavored to prove that he was guily of all the crimes charged by the southern people. It must be a great comfort to an earnest, scholar-like and competent actor, to read such comments upon newspapers of the time. Not long since, a Brooklyn journal objected to Mr. Booth's restoration of Richard III, that it retains the apparitions introduced by Cibber! Cibbe introduced no apparitione, and Mr. Booth's version of the tragedy does not contain a line—aside from two or three phrases—that is not in the original play.
